Statues in London

There are a lot of statues in London – some are very old and some are new.

This is Nelson's Column, in Trafalgar Square in London. The column is fifty-seven metres tall and the statue is five and a half metres tall. The artist's name is Edward Baily. The statue is about 165 years old. Nelson has got a Sea Captain's hat on his head and he's got long hair, but he's only got one arm. He's got scars on his face from one hundred and fifty years of bad weather!

This is a statue of Charlie Chaplin (the famous film actor) in Leicester Square in London. The statue is about twenty-six years old. The artist's name is Edward Doubleday. Chaplin's statue is new and very small (about two metres high). There are statues of Charlie Chaplin in Switzerland, France and the USA.
